

A Column's Finale

HIPPOCRATES & HIS KIN

THE HIPPOCRATES AND HIS KIN column has run its course. I thank Richard Johnson, MD, editor of this journal for 15 years preceding my four-year term, for encouraging me to write the HHK column in the summer of 1993. Over these eight years, I have appreciated the several Editorial Committees for allowing me great latitude in writing this OpEd column which has appeared in every issue until last month.

Thanks to the members of the medical society for their comments and encouragement. I was gratified with the email response from colleagues and others from several states and Canada who have followed the web edition and other county medical societies who republished some of them. Past columns can be read at www.healthcarecom.net.

I will continue my collection of vignettes, comments, and opinions of other physicians in the Voices of Medicine column which was initially started, at my suggestion, by James Coyle, MD, by reviewing the various county society journals. He wrote the column from April 1995 until his untimely death in April 1998. Your feedback is appreciated.
